

INVITATION

Launch of Caring for your premature baby at home.
A Web resource for parents

Queen's University
Belfast

TinyLife in partnership with Queens University Belfast, invite you to join them to launch their latest initiative to help parents of premature babies. The resource was developed for parents by parents and health and social care providers working together.

There will be short presentations from Dr Michael McBride, Chief Medical Officer and Professor Linda Franck, University of California San Francisco.

Parents have told us that support and information for when they are at home with their premature baby is important to them. The resource is organised around topics raised by parents during focus groups and the content includes practical advice and lots of short videos of parents and professionals that we believe parents will find invaluable.
