FOREWORD

A KEY PART OF DELIVERING THE OVERARCHING TEN-YEAR STRATEGY FOR CHILDREN AND YOUNG PEOPLE IS ENSURING THAT THEIR VIEWS, EXPERIENCES AND PERSPECTIVES INFORM OUR WORK.

We are deeply committed to ensuring that Government Departments are enabled to engage meaningfully and directly with children and young people. We have firsthand experience of the efficacy of such an approach and have been impressed with the sincerity, maturity and creativity of the children and young people with whom we, and our officials, have engaged.

We want to see all Public Authorities here reaping the benefits of such engagement for themselves. It is clear to us that policies and services which impact on children and young people are much more effective if they are based on the lived experience of those whose lives we are working to improve.

We established the Participation Network to help equip Public Authorities to make the most of opportunities to learn directly from children and young people. We are pleased that 81 Public Authorities have already accessed their training, consultancy, advice and technical support services.

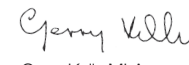

The Ask First standards, developed by the Participation Network, will further assist those Public Authorities who are increasingly recognising the importance of involving children and young people in the development of policy and services.

We believe that these standards for children and young people's participation provide useful guidance for establishing effective direct engagement mechanisms, as well as a benchmark for measuring their effectiveness.

We hope that in fulfilling the shared commitment that all our children and young people thrive and look forward with confidence to the future, Public Authorities will work towards applying these standards and that before developing policy and services they will consult the standards and Ask First.

INTRODUCTION

These standards have been developed by the Participation Network to support public authorities in the work of creating effective processes for engaging children and young people in decision making. The standards set out the various elements, which together, ensure that the involvement of children and young people in public decision making is both meaningful for them, and effective for the Public Authorities with whom they are engaged.

Each standard is illustrated by a series of actions that Public Authorities can work towards, and use as a measure of progress, in developing increasingly effective engagements with children and young people.

The standards are underpinned and informed by the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child¹, Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act (1998) and "Our Children and Young People - Our Pledge"², the Government's 10 year strategy for children and young people in Northern Ireland.

THE STANDARDS ARE BASED ON:

- What children and young people told us during the feasibility study that led to the development of the Participation Network (Turning up the Sound³)
- Our training and consultancy work with public sector personnel
- The views of the child and youth organisations registered on our database
- The Equality Commission for Northern Ireland Guidance for Public Authorities⁴

It is hoped that the standards will form the basis of future partnership work between the Participation Network, Public Authorities and children and young people.
